THE reports upon the Government Schools issued from time to time by Mr. STEWART. are always characterised by sound sense, practical, and to the point. The review of the schools for 1878, which we published yesterday, is no exception to this fule. A portion of the interest which would otherwise attach to it, is lost by the fact that some of the more important points have been anticipated by the controversy which recently took place on the subject of secular as opposed to denominational education, and with reference to the Morrison Scholarship. Upon these points Mr. STEWART has, with equal taste and judg- Adansie biels (Hills?) where they await the ment, limited himself to very few observa- issue of peace negotiations. . The main feature in the report is the satisfactory, indication which it affords of the spread of education generally in the Colony. Some years ago, it was discovered by investigation that there were certainly over ten thousand children in Hongkong, who recoived no education whatever, and it has been the laudable endeavour of the Government, and of some private institutions, to which due credit is given in the report, to alleviate this crying evil. The system of grants in aid was introduced as the last step name of the Lee-ching shop, and selling them towards this end, and there appears little doubt that the plan which has been matured by the Government with Mr. STEWART's ad- work man employed by him. It appears from the report just issued that him a letter and asked him to see if the rings at the present time a total number of 3,500 and stones had been delivered up. The amount of expenditure required would not be beyond the means of the Colony, and the money would be spent in a way which would do permanent good to vast munbers who, but for such assistance, advantages of higher education, but in the darkness of untaught ignorance.

We regret to notice that Mr. STEWART. states there is little hope of the difficulty with reference to the Morrison Scholarship being settled without having recourse to a legal decision. So much has already been said on this subject that it would be, perhaps, unfortunate to reopen it at the present moment. One point, however, should not be overlooked by the Trustees, who are now withholding the money, and that is that, should turn out that they are not justified in doing, they are incurring a grave responsibility, and are called upon very scriously to reflect whother they are so certain of their ground as to feel justified in preventing the money being applied to the purposes of furthering education. If they are mistaken, there is no escaping from the fact that, however good their intentions, they are retaining money which should long ago have been paid over by them, and by retaining it, are defeating the laudable object to which it was

Bome very strong comments followed upon the conduct of Gosford and of Lady Doughty, and then the learned counsel went on to ask why Liady Doughty should have written to Roger, saying that if he persisted in his intention of coming into Hampshire she should " make known to his father the circumstances that had occurred." Why had she said, "You are award of the reports that are ourrent"? What did she mean by that? Surely the words were only explainable upon one

Next, the learned Doctor addressed himself to the statement made by the delendant that he had arranged with Gosford to make over Upton to Lady Radeliffe as a free gift. Gosford had said that Upton was not Roger's to give. Perhaps not. But Roger was terrified out of his mind; he was expecting a result too terrible to be calmly contemplated; and be said to Gosford, " Take ber, and take care of her." "But." interposed the Lord Chief-Justice, "Gosford must have known that Upton was not in Roger's gift." " It is a difficulty, I admit," said Dr. Kenesly; and so went on to discuss the evidence of Mr. Balpitt, and the story of the memorable meeting at the Grosvenor Hotel. "As to this," said the learned counsel. "I don't see where I am. I am involved in a cloud of mystery." Then followed some comments upon the defendant's. THE DUKE'S WOOING. BY L. H. F. DE TERREAUX. Round the Northland, winter hurdens Low the sun of noonday shines : Orystal blossoms of snow-gardens Glitter on the frosty pines. Finland sends the winds that pinion Neva's deep and rapid tide; O'er the river's chain'd dominion Cloak'd and furr'd the skaters glide.

There are two among the skaters, Who the biting breezes stem, Gay, as though the Frost-creator's Gyves were roses unto them: The beloved and her lover. Bridegroom come across the seas : Tenderly he bends above her. Whispers words of troth like these; "Princess, let the frost's bestowing Pave a path for flitting feet:

In our bearts is summer glowing. Summer's pulses in us beat; And I could not cherish fonder Thy white forebend, thy ripe month, Were the barren branches youder . Palms and banians of the South. "Yet there is a land where lighter Winter rests on lawn and len, But where summers bloom the brighter: Summer-loves are there for thee. Tardy springtide slow increases, Rains of June make green the glen,

Frost of winter never freezes. Hearts and loves of Englishmen. "Wilt thou share our misty regions? Wilt thou dare the ocean wide, For the kingdom whose allegiance Turns to greet its Prince's bride'P O, 'twill welcome thee sincerely. For thy spotless brow of snow; And more nearly and more dearly

Since the sons of Britain know.

"I have sail'd the wide world over. · South and cast have braved the tide. Yet could elsewhere ne'er discover Dearer heart to make my bride." So be chaps her pliant figure, Hears responsive murinars sweet: Through the frost's unbending victor Past they skim with flying feet. Surjothly as the ice-track bears them.

Smooth may glide their future life. While two empires' love declares them Happy Prince and happy Wife! Rosy joy be theirs completest, Even now as Love decrees Britain's sailor weds the sweetest Lady from the Baltic seas.
